“The files in Confidential Print: Latin America offer invaluable, accessible material to researchers engaged in the study of the region.”

Professor Colin Lewis, London School of Economics
This digital collection includes complete runs of all British Government Confidential Print volumes relating to the nations of South and Central America.

This collection begins in the aftermath of independence for the former Spanish and Portuguese colonies of Latin America, addressing the politics of state-building and the Latin American nations’ establishment of their place in the fast-expanding global economy. Going on to cover revolutions, wars and territorial changes, relations with indigenous peoples, the fitful progress of democracy, the influence of foreign financial interests, industrial and infrastructural development (including the building of the Panama Canal), slavery, immigration from Europe and the rise of political ideologies such as fascism and communism, amongst many other topics, the documents presented here form a vital resource for any scholar of Latin American history in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Highlights include:
• The nine-year siege of Montevideo (1843-52)
• British emigration to Argentina and Brazil (1860s-90s)
• British filibustering expeditions against Cuba (1884-5)
• Protestant schools in the Mosquito Indian Reserve (1900)
• The building of the Panama Canal (1900s)
• Proposals for a confederation of Central American states (1907)
• The dictatorships of Getúlio Vargas (1930-45) in Brazil and Juan Perón (1946-55) in Argentina

Files deal equally with specific political events, such as the 1891 civil war in Chile and Brazilian legislation against the slave trade, and with wider trends, such as British involvement in the development of Brazil’s railways and a long series of boundary disputes between numerous Latin American states and colonies.

Confidential Print: Latin America is an Archives Direct resource: its users can benefit from searches across all resources available to them in the Archives Direct portal. All document images are provided in full colour and are full-text searchable. Please see our website for more details.

Editorial Board
Hortensia Calvo, Tulane University
Jeff Gould, Indiana University
Greg Grandin, New York University
Colin Lewis, London School of Economics

Picture credits: Front: Slaves in Brazil; Juan Perón in 1946; the Panama Canal, 1915. Back: Juan Perón in 1973; Monument to the Heroes of the War of the Pacific, Valparaíso, Chile; Emperor Pedro I of Brazil, 1834. All licensed under Wikimedia Commons (commons.wikimedia.org). All other images © The National Archives, UK.