Eighteenth Century Journals consists of the following five modules, each highlighting various aspects of the social, cultural and political climate characteristic of the eighteenth century.

Eighteenth Century Journals I
Newspapers and Periodicals, 1693-1793, from the Bodleian Library, Oxford

Includes 76 rare journals combining well-known publications with more minor works. A key strength of this module is the theatrical journals, including The Theatre, The Anti-Theatre, The Comedian, The Rhapsodist and the Theatrical Monitor.

Eighteenth Century Journals III
Newspapers and Periodicals, 1680-1816, from British Library Newspapers, Colindale and Cambridge University Library

This module features a strong selection of colonial newspapers from Canada, the Caribbean and India, demonstrating how news spread throughout the Empire and how culture, taste and political concerns were disseminated.

Eighteenth Century Journals II
Newspapers and Periodicals, 1699-1812, from the Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center, University of Texas at Austin

The Harry Ransom Center holds one of the finest collections of 17th and 18th century newspapers and periodicals in the world. The material included in this module is drawn from London, Dublin and Edinburgh and also includes many local and provincial publications, enabling the study of events from multiple locations and perspectives. Types of periodicals range from political journals such as Joseph Addison’s Freeholder to local newspapers such as the York Chronicle and literary reviews including The Present State of the Republick of Letters.

Eighteenth Century Journals
Newspapers and Periodicals, 1693-1793, from the Bodleian Library, Oxford

Includes 76 rare journals combining well-known publications with more minor works. A key strength of this module is the theatrical journals, including The Theatre, The Anti-Theatre, The Comedian, The Rhapsodist and the Theatrical Monitor.
Eighteenth Century Journals IV
Newspapers and Periodicals, 1708 to 1820, from Chetham’s Library, Manchester and the Brotherton Library, University of Leeds

This module includes a wide variety of magazines and periodicals that express the diverse range of intellectual concerns that was characteristic of the Enlightenment reader, and a strong collection of Manchester newspapers covering the growth of industry, urbanisation and radical politics.

Eighteenth Century Journals V
The Lady’s Magazine and Other Titles, 1712-1838, from Birmingham Central Library, British Library, Cambridge University Library and Liverpool John Moores University Library

This module contains an exclusive complete run of The Lady’s Magazine, 1770-1832, not found anywhere else in the world. Other relevant titles including The Lady’s Monthly Museum, The Lady’s Philosopher, The Minerva Magazine and The New Novelist’s Magazine. It is the perfect guide to the sensibilities of both genders in the age of Jane Austen.

“The Lady’s Magazine was one of the most enduring and influential titles of its day and a precursor of the modern women’s magazine. It is an essential resource for anyone working in periodical studies and students of any aspect of eighteenth-century culture.”

Dr Jennie Batchelor, University of Kent, UK

Dr Jennie Batchelor, University of Kent, UK
Eighteenth Century Journals draws together material from some of the finest archives across the UK and the US, with the aim of representing the rich variety of the eighteenth century press.

From political journals circulated in London coffee houses to colonial newspapers, and from poetic reviews to magazines for ladies of fashion, Eighteenth Century Journals illuminates all aspects of social, political and literary life, providing an opportunity to examine a variety of topical issues, and to compare a range of perspectives on the debates of the day.

Features include:

- Full-text searchable, double-keyed transcriptions of every page
- All titles have been screened carefully against EEBO, 17th & 18th Century Burney Collection Newspapers and ECCO to ensure there is minimal overlap
- Interactive index of every item in the Lady’s Magazine allows users to search detailed metadata on every article
- Major titles and much rarer items can be found side-by-side, with publications from across the British Isles and the British Empire

“Periodicals and newspapers were a characteristic form of expression for eighteenth-century writers and all students of the period will surely profit from reading them.”

Professor Brian Cowan, McGill University

For more information and free trial access, please visit - www.amdigital.co.uk

Editorial Board

Dr Jennie Batchelor, University of Kent
Professor Jeremy Black, University of Exeter
Professor Brian Cowan, McGill University
Professor Laura Mandell, Miami University of Ohio
Professor Kevin O’Neill, Boston College

The Publisher is grateful to the contributing archives for the reproduction of the images used in this flyer