This is a marvellous resource for all those teaching or researching into the History of South Asia between the foundation of the East India Company in 1615 and the granting of independence to India and Pakistan in 1947.

Particularly strong for the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries this collection of unique manuscript sources from the National Library of Scotland offer a captivating insight into the relationship between the British Government and the British Empire in India and between the British Empire in India and the Indian Princely States.

Key documents include letters from Lord Cornwallis during his first term as Governor-General to Henry Dundas, on the war with Tipu Sultan, delicate alliances with Princely States, the precarious nature of the East India Company's finances, the permanent settlement and the renewal of the East India Company's Charter.

There are also letters of Henry Dundas to Governor-Generals of India on French Policy in India, treaties with Indian Princes, the army and the Mysore War.

There are extensive papers of James Stuart as Commander-in-Chief of the East India Company's forces based in Fort St George (Madras). Stuart's papers cover political and military events in Madras, the arrest of Lord Pigot, Governor of Madras and Stuart's subsequent court martial, the Second Mysore War and Stuart's suspension from the command of the forces by the Madras Government.

Letters of Sir Archibald Campbell during his time as Governor of Madras to Henry Dundas capture in detail political, military, civil and administrative affairs and relations with the French, Dutch and Indian Princes.

Also included are journals and diaries which capture the innermost thoughts of soldiers and civil servants in India on a wide variety of topics such as military and political affairs, the Sikh Wars, the Indian Uprising, hunting expeditions, geographical surveys, journeys and voyages.

Unique papers relating to agriculture include records of tea and coffee planting in India and Ceylon with illustrated sketches, diagrams and maps of plantations and the reminiscences of an indigo farmer.

There are many papers on trade including papers on the East India Company's Charter, shipping the tea and cotton trade and papers of the firm of Arbuthnot and Co.

The collection will appeal to all those interested in Indian social history, urban history, agriculture, politics and trade. There is sufficient depth to appeal to researchers and the wealth of illustrative material and easy to read documents make this ideal for student project work.
"Drawing upon the unique manuscript archives of the National Library of Scotland this project provides a fully searchable online resource for studying the relationship between Britain and the British Empire in India in which the Scots played a unique and central role as traders, generals, missionaries, Viceroy's, Governor-Generals and East India Company officials. It will be a great practical benefit to both students and professional historians."

Dr. Crispin Bates, Consultant Editor, Director, Centre for South Asian Studies, University of Edinburgh, and author of Subalterns and Raj: South Asia since 1600
FEATURES:

- Fully indexed (with reference to people, places and topics) enabling users to search with ease across the whole collection.

- High quality greyscale images with illustrated documents captured in colour.

- A commissioned essay by Dr Crispin Bates, which provides historical context and a further means of approaching and accessing the material.

- A slideshow gallery, biographies of key figures, a chronology, glossary and links to relevant and useful external web resources.

- Static URLs and PDF downloads ensure that materials can easily be incorporated into teaching software like Blackboard CourseSites.

- Bibliographic details can be exported to Refworks and Endnote, simplifying the task of citing material from online resources.

www.amdigital.co.uk